EEOC 2012 STATISTICS
Workplace discrimination charges with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) declined slightly in 2012. The most frequently filed charges of discrimination are retaliation, race, and sex discrimination, and the most commonly alleged type of discriminatory action is discharge. Retaliation charges constituted 38.1% of the total number of the charges, the highest percentage for retaliation charges in history. SUPERVISOR FIRED FOR BEING UNCOOPERATIVE
John McGrory was a supervisor at Applied Signal Technology, Inc. One of his subordinates, Dana Thomas, filed a complaint with human resources against McGrory alleging gender and sexual orientation discrimination. An investigator found that McGrory had not discriminated against Thomas but did find that he had been uncooperative and untruthful during the investigation. Applied Signals fired McGrory for his conduct during the investigation, and McGrory then sued Applied Signals for wrongful termination, asserting that his termination was retaliation for his participation in the investigation. The court determined that while employees are protected against retaliation for participating in an investigation of workplace discrimination, nothing in the Fair Employment Housing Act shields an employee from being terminated for lying or withholding information during an employer’s investigation of a discrimination claim. The decision is McGrory v. Applied Signal Technology, Inc. filed on January 24, 2013. Readers are reminded that under UC San Diego Policy, managers or supervisors who fail to report harassment may be subject to disciplinary action.

55-YEAR-OLD MANAGER WINS RETALIATION CLAIM
The EEOC won a victory against Radio Shack on behalf of a 55-year-old manager who was fired days after he complained about age discrimination. David Nelson had been employed with Radio Shack for over 25 years when a new 43-year-old manager was hired to supervise him. Shortly after the new manager was hired, Nelson, who had a spotless performance record, received two “performance improvement plans.” Nelson complained to human resources that he believed he was being discriminated against based on his age. Within five days of his complaint, Radio Shack fired him. The EEOC filed a lawsuit charging Radio Shack with age discrimination and retaliation in violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act and obtained an award of nearly $675,000 for Nelson. The EEOC trial attorney stated “It is particularly important for the EEOC to vigorously enforce the anti-retaliation provisions in the employment discrimination laws. If employees do not feel comfortable coming forward when they feel they are being discriminated against, the very purpose of the anti-discrimination statutes is eviscerated.”

DID YOU KNOW?
It has been 100 years since women suffragists first marched in Washington, DC to demand the right to vote. On March 3, 1913, the day before President Woodrow Wilson’s inauguration, 5,000 women gathered on Pennsylvania Avenue “to march in a spirit of protest against the present political organization of society, from which women are excluded.” Surprisingly at that time, even some women opposed women’s right to vote. March is Women’s History Month.
